Haglelgam, in his nomination of Takesy, to the position of Secretary of the FSM Department of External Affairs, the position which has been vacated by Secretary Andon Amaraich, since his resignation on June 12, feels that the nomination is from his firm conviction that the nominee is the single most qualified individual to assume this important position.

Graduation

When you face these challenges, just remember that there is no limit to what you can do if you put your effort and mind to it.

"To the faculty and staff at PATS," Haglelgam said, "I commended you for your fine work in educating these graduates for the past four years. You have prepared them to enter a new chapter in their adult life and I want to encourage you to continue the fine tradition that will always make PATS an outstanding institution throughout our region. To the dedicated friends of PATS, your tireless effort and commitment in raising funds for the school this year is highly commendable and I hope you keep up this spirit in the years ahead because I believe that we must help ourselves first before we can expect help from others. This is the basis for the success story of this school and of those who have ran the school over the past 25 years. So let us keep that spirit alive and move forward to face the challenges of tomorrow with the same spirit and determination.

In another related activity, Haglelgam in his June 1 address to the Yap Outer Island High School graduating class during the commencement exercises held on Ulithi, urged the graduates to make use of the many opportunities that are now available to them today that students of his time did not have.

"With better opportunities and more means of financing your college educations now I believe you have a better chance of succeeding in college if you put your mind and effort to it," he said.

Haglelgam encouraged those who wanted to find a job or settle down and raise a family to make use of what they have gained during the four years in whatever endeavor they choose to undertake.

He told the graduates, "You are going to be important members of your island communities and please do not lose sight of this when you leave here," adding, "Be good members of your island villages, support and keep your local customs and cultural values alive because these are necessary to keep your identity."

PALIKIR Pohnpei (FSM INFORMATION SERVICE) - The two-year old Poultry Farm, under the Division of Pohnpei State Agriculture, State Department of Conservation & Resources Surveillance, is operating under combined efforts of the Pohnpei State, and FSM National Governments and private sectors. It involves two Breeder Farmers, a Hatchery, Sixteen Chicken Raisers and a Chicken Processing Plant, according to the Pohnpei State Agriculture Administrative Assistant, Zorro Donre.

2nd Cholera outbreak in Chuuk State

PALIKIR, Pohnpei (FSM INFORMA-TION SERVICE) - As of June 15, this year, eighteen laboratory confirmed cases of cholera, were reported from Chuuk State. The outbreak is limited to Chuuk Lagoon islands with the majority of cases from Uman, a few from Eot, and a case from Weno (Moen). Cholera outbreak was suspected during the last week of May and finally confirmed early this month. This is the first confirmation of cholera since 1982-83 and second outbreak on any state, according to a June 15 Memorandum to Health Services directors throughout FSM by Department of Human Resources Secretary Dr. Eliuel K. Pretrick.

Pretrick also advised that since this outbreak is continuing, all states are urged to promptly initiate the emergency regulations distributed on June 7th from the Department of Human Resources. And that it may also be beneficial for all state hospitals to begin active daily surveillance of admissions and out-patient visits for diarrhea, and adding, that it is suggested that hospital laboratories begin obtaining supplies needed for culturing stool and environmental samples for Vibrio cholerae.

Cholera is a disease caused by an infectious agent called Vibrio Cholerae. It is an acute intestinal illness characterized by sudden onset, profuse watery stools, vomiting, rapid dehydration, acidosis and circulatory collapse. Death may occur within a few hours of onset. If untreated, fatality rates may exceed fifty percent, however, with proper treatment fatality rates are below one percent. Mild cases with only diarrhea are common, especially in children.

The diagnosis is confirmed by culturing cholera vibrios from feces of carriers, food contaminated by water, soiled hands or flies. Spread through direct contact with patients is almost non-existence. The incubation period usually takes from a few hours to five days.

The suggested preventive measures in controlling further spread of cholera are as follow: proper (sanitary) disposal of human feces; hand-washing; protection and purification of water supplies; sanitary supervision of processing, preparation, and serving of foods, especially those eaten raw like fish, shell-fish and others; access and availability of hand-washing facilities for food handlers; boiling of drinking water, milk or dairy products; destruction of flies and their breading areas; screening to protect foods from fly contamination; and education of the public in personal hygiene, especially thorough hand-washing before eating and after defecation.

CONTROL OF PATIENT, CONTACTS, AND THE IMMEDIATE ENVIRONMENT:

First thing to do is to report to the local health authority. Hospitalization of patients experiencing acute symptoms is desirable, but strict isolation is not recommended. Wards with cholera patients can be operated without hazard to staff and visitors, provided if attendants pay great attention to cleanliness, but quarantine is not necessary.

Each time after handling patient's articles contaminated with feces and vomitus, disinfection of hands, articles, or even discharges must be observed.

Investigation for the vehicle(s) of transmission must be carried out to identify the source of infection whether from polluted drinking water or from contaminated food. As for the contacts, a search for unreported cases is only recommended for those exposed to a possible common source. Surveillance of contacts for five days from last exposure and probably longer if their feces are known to contain cholera vibrios. Treatment of family contacts with tetracycline or furazolidone is recommended.

In terms of specific treatment, using adequate volumes of electrolyte solutions to correct dehydration, acidosis and hypokalemia is required. Otherwise, if patients are in shock, isotonic intravenous fluids or Dacca solution have to be administered as rapidly as possible. Tetracyline along with antimicrobial agents or antibiotics limit the duration and volume of diarrhea as well as shorten the period of excretion of vibrios.

Should cholera becomes epidemic in any given area, protective measures, are to ensure the availability and proper use of adequate treatment facilities. Emergency measures to assure a safe water supply for drinking, cooking and washing dishes or food containers have to be used unless water supply is treated by chlorination and is protected from contamination. A thorough investigation designed to locate the vehicle and circumstances (time, place, person) of transmission has to be initiated to plan on necessary control measures. Furthermore, handling of food and drink, even after cooking or boiling, against contamination by flies and unclean hands must be carefully supervised. Control flies by limiting fly breeding, through use of appropriate insecticides and by screening kitchens and eating places have to be maintained.

Concerning international measures, telegraphic notification by government to World Health Organization (WHO), Centers for Disease Control (CDC), South Pacific Commission (SPC) and to other adjacent countries indicating cholera outbreak has to be sent. Ships, boats, aircrafts and land transport arriving from cholera areas are subject to inspections.

Immunization is no longer recommended by WHO as a requirement in travel from country to country in any part of the world and is not required by CDC, USA, though some individual countries may continue to impose vaccinations. Travelers may be required to submit to a stool examination when they come from an infected area within the incubation.
